

The audience changes. So should the explanation.

My work has moved between travel articles, client email, Kathmandu heritage sites and one-to-one learning support. Different setting, same question: what does this person need to understand, and what is the clearest way to get them there?

Three pieces. Three different reader needs.

Three published pieces for Global Eco Trails. I chose them because they show different communication problems: helping a beginner prepare, adding cultural context to a familiar route, and making several local traditions easier to navigate.

I wrote these pieces for Global Eco Trails; the company website publishes them under the owner's byline.

01 / PRACTICAL + DESTINATION WRITING

A Practical Guide for First-Time Trekkers

A beginner-focused piece that turns broad trekking concerns into practical guidance on preparation, pace, comfort and difficulty.

READER	Someone considering an early trek and trying to judge what preparation will actually matter.
COMMUNICATION TASK	Make practical information useful before the reader is already on the trail.
MY CONTRIBUTION	Research, information selection, structure and draft writing.

Published on Global Eco Trails under the company owner's byline.

02 / CULTURAL + RESEARCH-BASED WRITING

Monasteries Along the Everest Base Camp Trail

A cultural guide written to help travellers encounter monasteries along the route as living religious and community spaces, rather than only scenic stops.

READER	Travellers likely to reach these places with limited cultural or religious context.
COMMUNICATION TASK	Add useful context without turning a travel article into an academic explanation.
MY CONTRIBUTION	Research, cultural context, organisation and draft writing.

Published on Global Eco Trails under the company owner's byline.

03 / RESEARCH + DESTINATION WRITING

A Guide to Festivals in Upper Mustang

A destination guide that brings several festivals, rituals and community practices into one clear structure for readers preparing to visit Upper Mustang.

READER	Travellers trying to understand which festivals take place in Upper Mustang and what they mean locally.
COMMUNICATION TASK	Organise several traditions without flattening them into a generic list of culture.
MY CONTRIBUTION	Research, information grouping, structure and draft writing.

Published on Global Eco Trails under the company owner's byline.

What changes when the audience can answer back.

Articles let me plan the explanation. Email, guiding and tutoring are less predictable: the next question can change what happens next.

DEC 2024-PRESENT /
INTERMITTENT / PROJECT-BASED

Content Contributor & Correspondence Support

Global Eco Trails / Kathmandu, Nepal

Alongside the published work, I handle client enquiries, itinerary questions, booking communication and follow-ups - drafting and revising replies for clarity and appropriate professional tone.

AUG 2024-PRESENT / SEASONAL

Independent City Guide

Kathmandu Valley, Nepal

I conduct personalised English-language tours at Kathmandu Valley heritage sites, adapting explanations of history, religion, architecture and cultural practices to visitors' questions, interests and prior knowledge.

MAR 2023-OCT 2024 / PRIVATE /
ONE-TO-ONE

Private Tutor & Learning Support

Kathmandu, Nepal

I supported a visually impaired Grades 11-12 learner across six subjects in English and Nepali, and later worked with two young adult learners building foundational English from alphabet and phonics toward basic reading. If an explanation is not reaching the learner, the explanation has to change.

"Our guides, Netra and Puja, were fantastic." - client review

03 / HOW I WORK

What happens before the final sentence.

The finished article, email, tour or lesson is the visible part. The work underneath it is usually some version of research, organisation and adaptation.

01 / RESEARCH

Know what needs checking.

I start with the audience and purpose, then identify the facts, context and unfamiliar terms that need reliable background work.

02 / ORGANISE

Decide what deserves space.

I group related information, cut repetition and choose an order that helps the reader or listener understand what matters first.

03 / ADAPT

Do not explain everyone the same way.

I change tone, depth, examples and pace according to the reader, client, visitor or learner in front of me.

The part a CV leaves out.

My work explains what I can do. This is a little more about what keeps my attention in the first place.

I like walking where there are more trees. Lately, I have been learning to recognise birds - where they live, how they behave, and how many I had probably passed without really seeing.

I also notice the small ways culture places people beside other lives: offering food to birds in the name of pitri, or leaving water outside so they do not become kakakul. I am interested in what ordinary gestures can carry - belief, memory, care, habit, story.

Not every small observation needs a big conclusion. I mostly keep the question and come back to it later. Looking back, that probably explains part of the path so far: literature, an ecocritical thesis, writing about places, guiding visitors through Kathmandu, and wanting to work where culture, environment and communication overlap.

At work, I am much more practical about it. A reader may need the useful detail first. A visitor may need context rather than a long history lesson. A learner may need the explanation rebuilt from the beginning. I like working out which version is actually useful.

The background behind the work.

Literature, journalism and tourism training sit behind different parts of the work above. The full chronology and skills list are in my CV.

2020-2023 / PASSED 2025

Master of Arts in English

Tribhuvan University / Ratna Rajya Laxmi Campus / CGPA 3.76/4.00 / Final grade A-

THE SHORT VERSION

A 30-second scan.

CONTENT	YES
CORRESPONDENCE	YES
CULTURAL COMMUNICATION	YES
TIME NEEDED	30 SEC

I work across content, correspondence and cultural communication. I have written three published travel and cultural pieces, handled client email communication, guided visitors in Kathmandu Valley and adapted one-to-one learning support. I am most useful when information needs research, structure and a clearer version for a particular audience.

CONTACT

Have something that needs careful communication?

I am open to communications, content, documentation and cultural-engagement opportunities, particularly across education, tourism, environment and social-impact work.
